Holodomor Memorial Day

Five Stalks of Grain

August 7th, 1932: Stalin authored a law which punished by death or ten-year imprisonment, any misappropriation of collective farm property. This led to mass arrests and executions of Ukrainian farmers. Even children searching for grain left in fields were convicted. The law became known as "The Law of Five Stalks of Grain."

Holodomor Memorial Day Announcement

"A genocide begins with the killing of one person, not because of what he has done, but because of who he is." - Kofi Annan, Secretary General of the UN, 2001

Today is Holodomor Memorial Day, when all over the world we remember the millions of Ukrainians who were starved to death in 1932-33. Holodomor means murder by starvation. This means that it was not caused by drought or poor crops but by human intervention. Soviet leader Joseph Stalin engineered this famine to punish Ukrainians for resisting Soviet rule.

Soviet authorities confiscated all food grown by the Ukrainian farmers. Although the harvest was rich, the Ukrainian people were forbidden to touch it. Anyone, including children, caught taking even a stalk of wheat could be executed. Special brigades searched houses and forcibly took all food from the Ukrainian people, ensuring a mass famine would ensue. While millions were dying of starvation, the Soviets took the wheat the Ukrainians had produced and sold it abroad.

This genocidal famine was denied, ignored, and covered up throughout the 20th century. Today, the Russian government continues to deny that the Holodomor was a genocide. But the testimony of survivors about what they witnessed and experienced tells a different story.

Through acts of Parliament, the government of Canada and five provinces, including Ontario, recognize the Holodomor as a genocide.

As such, we set aside a day of remembrance for the millions who were starved to death, many of whom were children. Together with the descendants of survivors living in Canada, let us remember the victims of the Holodomor.
